This presentation will address executive function, and ADHD and how they affect learning. New research exists on the life course of children with ADHD and their adult outcomes that illustrate how impaired Executive Function can negatively impact major life activities. The results of that research have numerous implications for the management of ADHD. Dr. Barkley will discuss the advances in our scientific knowledge of ADHD and their implications for treatment of children and teens having ADHD.

Referencing his best selling parents' book, Taking Charge of ADHD: The Complete Authoritative Guide for Parents, Dr. Barkley will also discuss the science-based treatments for the management of executive functioning deficits associated with ADHD, and the critical role parents play in effectively dealing with the struggling child.
